Debt The First 5 000

Debt: The First 5,000 Years is a book by anthropologist David Graeber published in 2011. It explores the historical relationship of debt with social institutions such as barter, marriage, friendship, slavery, law, religion, war and government; in short, much of the fabric of human life in society. It draws on the history and anthropology of a number of civilizations, large and small, from the first known records of debt from Sumer in 3500 BC until the present.

Debt: The First 5'000 Years 2011. Throughout its 5'000 year history, debt has always involved institutions – whether Mesopotamian sacred kingship, Mosaic jubilees, Sharia or Canon Law – that place controls on debt's potentially catastrophic social consequences. It is only in the current era, writes anthropologist David Graeber, that ...

Debt: The First 5,000 Years redeems the social sciences. Not As a sociologist, I've been despairing of late at the paucity of imagination and theoretical innovation in social science research. Academics, perhaps because of the need to publish quickly and garner grant money, seem content to only add statistical validation to already established conclusions.

I recently read Debt: the First 5000 Years by David Graeber, and it has stuck on my mind for a while. It's one of those "Everybody is wrong about X, here is what you've missed in plain sight" -type books; as Chamath would put it, "often wrong, but never in doubt." It's worth summarizing here, both because I think you'll find it interesting, and also because I'm enjoying the challenge of synthesizing all of these ideas together into a compact format.

PbtA-ifying 'Debt: the First 5000 Years' – Black Sky Red Visitor. The actual middle ages, as well as most of human history, had very little usage of money within a community -- instead, debts were used. In fact, all evidence suggests that the concept of debt far pre-dates the concept of money. What's more, the concept of money far pre-dates the concept of barter.
