The more I try to get things done, the less time I have to do them. I must decide on my priorities. In the old days, I used to set aside an hour on a daily basis to do this. I'd make complicated lists and then strategically go through and mark them from A to F, depending on their priority. Then I would take this list and painstakingly plan my ...

But as I've mentioned, planning to do something doesn't mean you'll actually get it done. You can have all the tools in the world to help you prepare, but it won't matter if you always fall short of actually completing what you plan. I've come to find that the tools for doing are quite different from the tools for planning.

To me, "Get it done" indicates either having someone else do it or causing something to be accomplished. For example, if you are in a business meeting and the CEO says, "I don't care what you do, just get it done," she is stating that you can do it or you can get someone else to do it - as long as whatever "it" is gets accomplished, the method ...

How do I get it all done? Here's how...maybe it will help you get it all done, too. 1. Pray. I start my day with prayer, and then I end my day with prayer. I ask Him to bless my plan for the day as I make it the night before, and then as my day starts, I ask Him to bless my day. 2. Make a daily list. I have written some about Why I Make Lists, and while that is a great read, here are five reasons that being a list maker will help you get it all done:
